2. The regiment consisted of four battalions: headquarters battalion and three student battalions; the student battalions were as follows: "K" battalion consisted of six companies; "V" battalion consisted of four companies; "R" battalion consisted of four companies. Headquarters battalion was not broken down into companies and it consisted of 150-200 men.
3. Student companies in "R" and "V" battalions consisted of approximately 120 men each; companies were further broken into four platoons. Each company had seven officers; one commanding officer, one technical officer, one political officer and four platoon leaders.
4. Student companies in "K" battalion consisted of approximately 180 men. This battalion was overstrength, due to the fact that there were more students than the number of battalions authorized in the regiment.
5. The student battalions were divided according to the curriculum as follows:
  - a. "V" and "R" battalions - tank driver training
  - b. "K" battalion - radio operator and tank commander training.
6. Training was conducted at platoon level, the platoon leader being the only instructor of general subjects. Technical and political subjects were instructed by the company technical and political officer.
7. The method of instruction used was the lecture type. Students were given oral examinations of which a record was maintained. No other examinations
